

CEMENT

dust down.

According to a presentation about the eco-flex paving system by Herra Group, the product is crack proof, non-slip and can last in temperatures from minus 58 degrees to plus 350 degrees F.

The product can be used for parking lots, emergency access routes, construction staging areas, road extensions and widening and aircraft landing sites, and many others.

Fegley said the grid system originally came from Germany and was introduced to the United States through Texas.

He said that before bringing the idea to Iowa, he had to make sure the grid system would last through the winter.

The system worked surprisingly well, Fegley said, and doesn't buckle like cement does and continues to filter water even when it's cold.

Compared to cement, the grid is about the same price, though Widmann said it'll save him some money in the future.

Freedom Storage is not connected to the city's sewer system and is not building a retention system for his storm water, because there won't be any.

He said he'll easily save $400 a month on his water bill.

Widmann said it could also benefit the business because it's on a 500-year flood plain.

"If we do have water, it's an easy cleanup," Widmann said. "It's pretty much self-cleaning."

The Pella Grid System uses cylinders made out of recycled plastic filled with pea rock to create an even surface area for walking and driving. The system absorbs water instead of creating runoff.
